Document 1. Extract from a local history website, Sheffield.

« My grandmother Doris, 84, remembers the Sheffield of the 1950s. « This street used to be full of children, » she says. « We didn't use to have televisions, so we would play outside until dark: hopscotch, marbles, football with a tin can. There used to be a sweet shop on the corner, where a penny bought you a whole bag of toffees. My father used to work in the steelworks, like every man in the street; the sky used to be grey with smoke, and Mum would wash the sheets twice a week. » Today, the steelworks have closed and the street is quiet. Doris no longer knows her neighbours, but she doesn't complain: « We used to be poor, and now my grandchildren go to university. I've got used to the silence — and the air is cleaner than it has ever been. » »

- Give three things children used to do in the street in the 1950s, and explain why they played outside so much.
